This is their harrowing story.

The Voyage

On June 4, 1981, a group of 10 Singaporean teenagers set out on a fishing trip from the island of Pulau Ubin. The group was made up of friends and classmates, ranging in age from 15 to 17 years old.

The weather was good and the sea was calm, so the group decided to venture further out to sea than usual. They were hoping to catch a big haul of fish to sell at the market.

However, as the day wore on, the weather began to change. The wind picked up and the waves became choppy. The group tried to turn back to shore, but it was too late. Their boat was caught in a strong current and capsized.

Stranded at Sea

The group was thrown into the water and struggled to stay afloat. They were all wearing life jackets, but the waves were so strong that they were quickly separated.

Some of the group managed to swim to shore, but others were not so lucky. Five of the teenagers, including the boat's captain, were lost at sea.

The remaining five teenagers were stranded at sea for weeks. They had no food or water, and they were constantly exposed to the sun and the rain.

As the days turned into weeks, the group began to lose hope. They knew that they could not survive much longer without food and water.

Cannibalism

In a desperate attempt to survive, the group decided to resort to cannibalism. They killed and ate one of their own members.

This was a difficult decision, but the group felt that it was necessary to survive. They knew that if they did not eat, they would all die.

The group continued to eat human flesh for several weeks. They eventually drifted to shore, where they were rescued by a passing ship.

Aftermath

The five teenagers who survived the ordeal were physically and emotionally scarred. They had witnessed the death of their friends and had been forced to resort to cannibalism to survive.

After they were rescued, the teenagers were taken to a hospital, where they were treated for their injuries and malnutrition.

The teenagers were eventually released from the hospital, but they continued to suffer from the psychological effects of their experience.
